Le bas Iusticier ; ou, le Seigneur bas Iusticier. One that hath base Iurisdiction (within a certaine Precinct) over his owne, or another mans, tenants ; takes notice of reall, or personall Actions not exceeding the value of 60 s. or wherein a greater amerciament, or fine then 7 s. 6 d. Tour. lies not : With trespasses a few Customes (as the reformed ones of Paris, and Meleun) allow him to deale, so they deserve not a greater fine then that ; but the most restraine him to personall matters, and those especially that concerne his owne rights ; (with which onely the Bas Iusticiers of old time used to meddle ; howsoever, their Iudges not content withall, have in processe of time introached on causes bred in villages between party and party, touching seisures, boundaries, delivery of possession, hasme done by trespassing beasts, and other slight and petty differences, that require a speedy, and locall decision ; for all which they are to keep but foure Courts in a yeare:) Criminall persons taken in the manner he must apprehend, and may keep them in his prison four and twenty hours ; but not longer, nor can he proceed further against them : Upon every Confiscation, Escheat, or Bien-vacant that falls within his Liberty he may take 7 s. 6 d. Tour. but they are so few, and that so little, as many Iusticiers neglect it.

Le haut Iusticier ; ou, le Seigneur haut Iusticier. A Lord of high Iurisdiction ; judges, and determines all civile and and criminall causes (except, as in la haute Iustice) happening within his Liberty, or Precinct; To which end he keeps a Iudge, or Garde de Iustice, at this time stiled higher (son Bailly, & Lieutenant,) who must be learned, and a Graduate (for a Iudge thats no Graduate is not, in France, held worthie to pronounce the sentence of death in an ordinary Iurisdiction:) And because of his owne businesses determinable (if they concerne the rights of his Iurisdiction, or Seigneurie) in his owne Court, he also keepes a Procureur fiscal, by the name, and mouth of whom he pleads, even as the King doth in higher Courts by his. He may hunt freely in fit seasons, over all the uninclosed grounds of his Liberties: He may fine his (offending) vassalls at his pleasure; and once in his time cause them all sweare, to acknowledge no other Iurisdiction then his; to preserve, by all possible meanes, the priviledges thereof; and to informe him of any that shall offer to incroach upon them: he levies to his own use all fines and confiscations (except for high treason) all Escheats (except bastards, and strangers goods) and all Biens Vacans (except some kind of wreckes) accruing within his Precincts: In Normandy he cannot keep malefactors in his prison above 24 houres; after which (if he have not the whilest condemned them) he must send them unto the next Supreame Lord; In other Provinces he may keep them longer, and every where punish, according to the customes of the countrey, all sorts of them (even to Sorcerers, Blasphemers, and Idolaters;) Only he refers over to the Kings officers, and Courts, all such as commit, or be charged with, high treason.

Le moyen Iusticier. The Lord of mean, or middle Iurisdiction; takes notice of all civill causes as well as the Haut Iusticier (except in the ordering of the separation of goods between married folkes; the interdiction of unthrifts; & les Decrets; wherein he comes as far short of him, as he goes beyond the Bas Iusticier en le seellé, confection d' inventaire, emancipation, dation de tuteurs & curateurs, wherewith the Bas Iusticier is not to deale:) But what criminall causes he may take notice of is not agreed on by the customes of France; for some of them, as those of Paris, Nivernois, and others, assigne him none but such as are not finable above 60 s. (the utmost he can impose in any cause;) Others give him power over Batteries, Bloudwipes, and sleight felonies; Others over Manslaughters, and capitall felonies; But others (the neerest unto the Common Law of France) permit him to judge no offenders but such as are to escape with life, and limb; And therefore his Iudge needs not to be a Graduate: Nor hath he (as the Haut Iusticier) a Procureur fiscal (though he have an Officer of almost the same nature, tearmed Procureur d' Office) because he hath no fisque, but only an allowance of 60 s. Tour, out of everie Confiscation, Escheat, or Bien vacant, thats levied, or gotten, in his Precinct.
